

Well my little chicks, it does not seem two minutes since we were celebrating Christmas and now Easter is nearly upon us.

Meg and I have been hopping about here and there and eating as many carrots as we can to make sure we are in tip top shape for the annual egg rolling race.

Regular readers will know we love this event and have proved quite successful at it over the years with a few first places. It is the highlight of our year and gives us a good excuse to tuck into a nice piece of traditional Simnel cake when we have finished.

I wonder if it is all chocolate eggs and cake for you this Easter or do you do something different? Let Meg and I know by dropping us a line. Email via Rebecca.hay@mmoc.org.uk and who knows you may win a wee prize.

COMPETITION CORNER

Now I don't know about you lot, but I always have an egg for breakfast. There is nothing better than tucking into all that nice white and yellow wonder. And of course the chocolate version is even better.

Meg has taken to going to a farm shop to buy her eggs and then she knows the chickens who have laid them are super healthy and that she is going to get a good coloured yolk.

She has started to get a bit adventurous and before I could say "that is no yolk", she started plying me with goose and ducks eggs instead of hens.

And the only one I could tell was different from the outside, was the ostrich one and that was because it was one big fella I can tell you. I thought the only way, I can crack this is to take my chum Peter Rigg down to the farm and he can explain the differences.

And so I did, but he got me even more confused, so I suggested he draw a super cartoon of the eggs and let you clever folk work out the differences.

It is all a bit of fun, but should get you in the mood for the big day and Meg and I would love to look at it, so why not send in your clever and colourful entries via Rebecca.hay@mmoc.org.uk

COMPETITION CORNER

All this egg-citement has got me thinking, it's time to give you older Morris Minor enthusiasts a bit of a challenge.

So welcome to a tough Easter wordsearch with a massive 50 words to find. Are you ready to crack it then?

Just find the words below and don't give up, just have a crème egg while you are working. It is all a bit of fun, but quite hard, so if you complete it and want to show me, then send your entries in and there may be a little prize on offer. Send via Rebecca.hay@ mmoc.org.uk
