

MUGS MATTERS

HELLO folks!

Halloooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooooo I am not sure about you all, but things just seem to be getting spookier and spookier by the day.

And that is not just because Halloween is upon us. It has been a strange old time these last few months and I think we are now all in need of some fun and more fun and more fun.

Autumn is a favourite time for Meg and I because there is not just Halloween, but Bonfire Night too and so there promises to be plenty of fun, even if it has to be done at a social distance!

We like nothing better than getting dressed up in the smartest and most eccentric costumes we can muster up to celebrate the great day and then a few weeks later, have some more laughs as we let off our rockets and bangers and make a jolly good noise.

As always, we would love to hear what you are all up to mark the big events and if you have the time, send in your pictures and words and let us see what a great time you are having.

Please just email them via Rebecca.hay@mmoc.org.uk and who knows you may win a wee prize. MUG

COMPETITION CORNER

Spooky goings on in the garage have proved to be spine chilling as Meg starts to get into the swing of Halloween.

The daft dot has frightened the life out of me twice now and that is in addition to the shock I get every morning when I wake up and see that scary bonnet grinning at me!

Halloween gives Meg the chance to try out her massive collection of spooky costumes, wigs and sadly, but impressively too, her ever growing bag of warts, which come in all sizes, colours and textures (urgh!)

I even found her trying out some strange experiments the other day, there was lots of bubbling potions and toads hopping around the garage.

Our old pal Peter Rigg the Artist popped into the garage to see what we were up to and before you could say hubble bubble, Meg had turned him into a mouse and he was squeaking away like a good un.

It took several hours for the spell to be lifted and when Peter came back to life, he was several pounds heavier, must have been all that cheese he scoffed during his mouse time!

He did whip out his pencils and easel and drew this fabulous cartoon for you all to colour in. It is a super sizzler and so it needs your best attention, colouring in pens and glitter to make it just right.

So, let's see what you can come up with then. All you have to do is colour, colour, colour and then send your super entries in, via Rebecca.hay@mmoc.org.uk

COMPETITION CORNER

And just when you thought life could not get any more exciting than Halloween. Yes folks it is time for Bonfire Night!

And if you want it to go with a crash, bang, wallop, you need to make a fabulous guy to put on top of the bonfire.

Meg and I have created two brilliant ones, pictured, using old clothes and straw which we found in the garage.

It is easy to do and you can just let your imagination go wild. That is the easy bit, for once you have done that, it is time to build a great big fire to put the guy on.

Be sure to use nice dry wood and pile it up well. The after admiring your work, try and persuade your mum and dad to part with some pennies and buy the best fireworks you can.

The louder, more colourful the better and enjoy watching them whizz along in the air and exploding.

It is all just for fun, so enjoy, but feel free to email us too say how you got on and who knows there may be a prize. Just send in via Rebecca.hay@mmoc.org.uk
